Four seminars for new research students

Wednesdays 1.30 – 3.30 pm

Room 133/ Building 72

These seminars are for all new research students in the Faculty of Engineering. They will introduce you to different ways of reporting your research effectively in reports, papers, posters and presentations. The focus is on practical advice to help you develop your own research communication skills.

28 October  Seminar 1  Writing your literature review

What is a literature review? What is the best way to structure and then write a good review? A good review is a vital first step in any research project, so in this seminar we look at how to develop and then write one.

4 November  Seminar 2  Devising conference posters

At conferences, you want to impress experts in the field with your exciting research findings. We examine how to devise and present a winning poster.

11 November  Seminar 3  Writing research papers

What do you need to do to get a paper published? We look at how to write successful conference and journal papers, and how to get published in high quality journals.

18 November  Seminar 4  Giving seminar presentations

What makes a memorable presentation? You want your research presentations to stand out. In this seminar, we look at ways of achieving this.
